For example, this could be a Windows Scheduled Task, an executable, batch file, or just a PowerShell command. The program can be used for your system safety and protection too because it checks if the scheduled tasks are safe and valid. Run Box has a simple user interface where you can create a scheduled task for execution in the future, select its type and choose among other options. It's now possible to add a command line, a scheduled task description, or just a text file to be passed as a parameter to the executable file. Once you're done with creating the task, you can click on the "Schedule" button to start the Run Box application. The program will check if the selected target file is a valid executable, and it will then launch it. If the file is not a valid executable, you'll be able to choose one from a list and the program will give you the reasons why it failed. The program can be used either as a task scheduler for daily use, or it can also be used as a backdoor or intrusion prevention system
