Using Tracks The first tool we will discuss for nonlinear editing is tracks. Normally, when a song or video is imported into your project, it is placed in its own layer with tracks. However, if you want to simply place the audio and video on separate layers with track markers and no prerecorded audio or video, you can simply add the audio and video layers to your composition by choosing Insert⇒Audio Tracks or Insert⇒Video Tracks. The new layers will have a yellow arrow on top of the white workspace in the New Layer dialog box and have a green menu in the lower right corner of the layer properties (see Figure 8-4). Figure 8-4 Inserting multiple tracks. You can control the audio with the default controls at the top of the layer property windows, but the video section of the property window is currently disabled. You can see this in Figure 8-4, bottom. You can change the audio to real time, import audio, or insert your own audio track by right-clicking the Yellow Arrow tool and selecting Change Playback. You can insert or replace the video layer in the same way and control it by right-clicking the Green Menu tool in the lower-right corner of the layer properties (see Figure 8-5). Figure 8-5 Right-clicking the green menu tool in the lower-right corner of the video layer properties lets you control the video or insert a different video track.

A silicon carbide (SiC) single crystal is expected to be applied to a semiconductor device having a high withstand voltage and a high speed operation. In order to manufacture a SiC device, a single crystal ingot of a wafer for semiconductor manufacture, in which a SiC single crystal ingot is formed as a substrate, is used. When a silicon carbide (SiC) single crystal ingot is manufactured, there is used a method of, for example, forming a single crystal substrate by a sublimation recrystallization method or the like and then removing a grown silicon carbide single crystal to obtain a silicon carbide single crystal ingot. In such a single crystal substrate (wafer) manufacturing method, when the removed silicon carbide single crystal ingot is released or another single crystal ingot is prepared, the state of the single crystal ingot is stabilized by the releasing condition, the direction of the single crystal ingot, or the like, and then it is cut into a proper size. In this case, the wafer for semiconductor manufacture is cut into a rectangular shape as a standard. It is necessary to cut the silicon carbide single crystal ingot into a circular shape as the standard of a wafer for a semiconductor. A method of obtaining a circular shape by cutting of a silicon carbide single crystal ingot (refer to Patent Literature 1) has been proposed.

Q: Bootstrap: non-responsive page with fixed top menu bar I have an issue with a page design I am making in Bootstrap. I want the page to look just like this: However, when I zoom out I want the top bar (and the submenus) to be scrollable as well. I would prefer to do it this way, as opposed to having scrollable bars in the tab-panes (I would not know how to do it). The only solution I was able to come up with was the following: However, this fixed the vertical position of the top menu, but not the horizontal. Is there a "stock" way of fixing this problem? A: you should use a top fixed navbar as an example as your is just a container, example fiddle or with the link in your question, update: You will just need to add.container {overflow-y:auto} to the container div that has the navbar on it. example fiddle Q: Is the real time loop of looping between (void ) and noreturn a classic C question? static void x() { while (!!(!(int)0 + (1
