Q: Does range scaling imply a scaling of the means? I have a 3-component data matrix ( $W$  in the paper,  $X$  in the figure). I found that  $W$  must be scaled to be in certain way so that the range of  $W$  is comparable to that of the differences of consecutive columns in  $X$  (i.e. so that the range of  $X_{i-1} - X_i$  is similar to the range of  $W$ ). In the figure, the range of  $W$  is plotted below the range of the differences of consecutive columns in  $X$ . Does this imply that if I scale  $W$  so that it has comparable range to that of  $X$ , the means will be comparable as well? A: The scale of the  $W$  and  $X_i$  is not compared to each other as the figure suggests. Rather, it is compared to the range of differences of the  $X_i$ . An identical range implies that the mean of each of the columns  $X_i$  will be comparable to the range of differences of the columns. Note: changing the scale of  $W$  should not affect the mean of the  $X_i$ . The mean of each column  $X_i$  is determined by the mean of the  $W_i$ . Note that the mean of the  $W$  does not change under scaling of  $W$ . The mean of each  $X_i$  is determined by the mean of the  $W_i$ .

Q: How to automatically run ETL scripts on server reboot

Need to know how I can write an automated task to run ETL scripts on server reboot. Need to do this as there is no one person here to look after and maintain this server. The server reboots itself and the ETL scripts are not executed when the server reboots. It only runs when the user accesses a particular page.

A: There are multiple ways of doing this, depending on what you want to achieve and how much time you want to spend. If you want to do this in the most efficient way, you should run an agent on the servers. This will allow the server to be continually updated and is as simple to run as starting
